Goals Outlined in Proposal Narrative
“Youth Justice Camps”

GOAL 1: Develop an appreciation for the ‘āina and how, as teens, they can make a difference in their families/communities.

Objectives
- Reduce the amount of plastic purchased and disposed by youth and their families.
- Create talking points for the youth to share with their families as to why plastic is bad for the environment.
- Provide youth with a reusable water bottle that they can decorate and take home to share with their family.
- Encourage their local church to have recycle days.

GOAL 2: Understanding the importance of clean water, the wai and the kai, and how youth can work with others to make a difference and improve this endangered resource.

Objectives
- Educate the youth to understand why it is important to conserve water and that it is not an unlimited resource.
- Beach cleanup is one visible way to preserve this resource.
- Youth learn the techniques and information to help them gather resources to set up cleanup projects.
- Encourage youth to organize beach cleanup days in their local communities.

GOAL 3: Develop an understanding of how our everyday activities as individuals affect the air quality that we breathe.

Objectives
- Youth identify things that they do in their daily life that contribute to poor air quality.
- Youth learn how vital clean air is through training in CPR, projects on the effects of smoking and vaping, and environmental air pollution.

GOAL 4: Understand that everyone, regardless of age, can make a difference.

Objectives
- Each youth identifies one change that they can make to become a better steward of the ‘āina.
- Develop a concrete plan of one activity that they will take back to share with their family and local church.

OUTCOME MEASURES
Written evaluation by each attendee:
- One thing you have learned that you will take back to your congregation
- One habit that you will focus on with your family to address one of the issues
- Attendees plan & lead an environmental justice workshop at an association meeting
